

To Whom It May Concern:

I am an overweight person who is OUTRAGED to find out that there are car companies that refuse to accommodate their larger customers, in particular I refer to HONDA. I do not understand with a seat belt law in existence how it wouldnt be MANDATORY for Honda to provide seat belts for ALL of their customers. I believe it is Honda's responsibility and all other car manufacturers to NOT discriminate against the larger size population but to offer the same protection while riding in their vehicles as the rest of the population. Why is it okay to put OUR lives in jeopardy or to penalize and punish us with an additional fee to be safe and law abiding?

Personally it has the potential to affect my driving to be so tightly constricted by the standard seat belts provided as I dont have the mobility that I should have, not to mention the irritation my neck feels from the belt rubbing up against it choking me. Last but certainly not least, dreading the winter months where I must forgo wearing outerware while driving to be able to connect the seat belt.

Theses concerns are not only for me, but for friends and family members also. Hoping this voice added to the many others is heard and respected.

Sincerely,
Nadeen Geller
